Status Report

As of right now, we have made a small amount of progress. We've discussed our table of contents and the direction that we want the report to take. Before selecting a topic, we searched for sources to confirm it was a viable option. Since then, we have continued to individually select articles, biographies, and journals to support our conclusion. We have agreed upon how the report will be broken up and will soon start writing our pieces.

Our more detailed table of contents will look like something along the lines of:

- I. Introduction and Ethical Question
- II. Background on the Right to the Internet
- III. Users of the Internet and its Role in our Lives
- IV. Who is restricted from using the Internet
- V. Alternative courses of action such as temporary bans or trials
- VI. Teleological Perspective
- VII. Deontological Perspective
- VIII. Normative Recommendation for the Ethical Dilemma
- IX. Conclusion

We plan to achieve the analysis level as described in Bloom's taxonomy. Analyzing will require us to differentiate between different components or relationships and demonstrate the ability to compare and contrast. As it is a hierarchy, this will involve first mastering knowledge, comprehension, and application. By comparing and contrasting different perspectives and courses of action, we will reach this level.

We have not had any notable issues as a team. Beyond emergencies and scheduling conflicts, none of which can be causes of blame, nothing substantial has come up. We may take up the offer for a team meeting with Dr. Wright to discuss any difficulties we may have. The structure sent to us has helped shape the direction of our report, and we look forward to using the worksheet.

We intend to hold frequent team meetings and remain engaged in compiling the final report and presentation. We will watch the Assertion-Evidence Structure for Slide Design video and take the recommendations into consideration when creating our presentation. We haven't decided how to break up the sections in the presentation, but it is likely they will be in line with what everyone writes for the report.

Lastly, we have noted that Sunday, the 28th is not a day in which we will all be available to present. We all be ready on July 1st, preferably at 8 pm. That is the time in which we hold our team meetings as we are all free past that point.
